software pageQ: As a physicist, why do we only study classical physics?

Why do we limit our studies to classical physics? Why can't we make predictions about the phenomena of quantum physics? A: Because classical physics is a simplified model of quantum physics (and all other laws of physics). The classical theory is one in which the only relevant forces are interactions between pairs of particles. The interactions are always of the Coulomb type - i.e. they are constant, linear functions of the distance between the two particles and the strength of the interaction is proportional to the square of the charge of the particles. The essential point is that the interactions are independent of where the particles are (i.e. the system is spatially homogeneous). In the quantum world the interactions are non-linear and highly dependent on the location of the particles. This means that there is an infinity of possible interactions which may occur (a sort of double well). In the classical world you only need to take into account the possibility of the two particles being very close or very far apart (and hence interacting). This allows you to construct a simplified model which is a good description of the quantum behaviour. For example, if you want to describe the pair interactions of electrons in an atom, there are two possible states for the electrons. If the electrons are far away, they don't interact at all. If they are close together, they repel one another. If they are in an intermediate state, they attract one another, but with a much weaker force than when they are close together. It is this intermediate behaviour that you get in the simplified model of the classical system. Pakistan signs lease of 9.3 acre land at Port of Karachi Pakistan has signed a 30-year lease for 9.3 acre of land in the Port of Karachi. The lease was signed between the Pakistan Economic Development Board friendly relationship for more than two decades. He said that China has extended a warm welcome to Pakistan. He said that there is an ongoing trade between the two countries and it is worth billions of dollars. “We should not talk of trade, but growth of bilateral trade should be the core of bilateral relationship,” he said, adding that it is a dream of both countries to establish a free trade area by 2025. He said that Pakistan is the seventh largest trading partner of China, and the two countries have an immense potential in trade. The embassy is looking to set up a trade fair in Beijing for Chinese businesses to expand their businesses in Pakistan. Mr Haider Ashraf said that during the Pakistan-China Investment Cooperation Summit held in Beijing last November, it was announced that Chinese state-owned investment entities will invest $15 billion in Pakistan and Pakistan's development fund will provide $1 billion loans to Chinese businesses. He said that there are some Chinese companies which are looking to invest in Pakistan's textile and pharmaceutical sectors. He said that Pakistan is the best market in South Asia for Chinese auto makers. He said that Pakistan and China's political leaders have been working closely to create trade opportunities. He said that China has been looking to invest in Pakistan's food sector for many years and Chinese companies have been looking to expand their businesses in Pakistan. He said that most of the products being exported to China are being manufactured in Pakistan. He said that
