The expression of Ly6C is induced by the primary inflammatory signal from tumor cells within the lymph nodes. We previously reported a novel cellular interaction between tumor cells and macrophages. This study focuses on further evaluation of this interaction. To study the mechanism of this interaction, we have analyzed the distribution of macrophages that had been previously isolated from tumor-draining lymph nodes (TDLNs). This was achieved by using the two-photon system to determine whether resident macrophages, which were migrated from the tumor-draining lymph nodes, were different from macrophages that had been attracted to the tumor cells within the TDLNs. We used a mouse xenograft model to evaluate the interaction between the tumor cells and macrophages. We found that the numbers of recruited macrophages within tumor nodules and the mRNA expression levels of the Ly6C (CD54) gene were significantly increased in the TDLNs of mice bearing tumor compared with naïve control mice. We also found that CD54+ cells were significantly increased in tumor nodules in the TDLNs of mice compared with naïve control mice. Using time-lapse microscopy, we also found that CD54+ cells were not chemotactically attracted toward tumor cells. Thus, our results suggested that the expression of Ly6C in macrophages is induced by the primary signal of tumor cells, through which these macrophages migrated to tumor nodules within the TDLNs.Inflation pressures from higher oil prices That's the key statement from Deloitte Money, a Canadian consumer protection organization. "[Oil prices] have moved higher, and that's really because of the very strong demand that we've seen across markets in Canada and around the world," says Christine Tardiff, Money's senior director of consumer protection, in an interview with CBC News. "We've had a really strong month, a strong year, for sure," she adds. "No matter where you are in the world, the price for oil has risen dramatically." According to Bank of Canada governor Stephen Poloz, inflation in Canada has been "more than a little bit below the 2 per cent target we've been focusing on, so it's certainly soft." He stressed that he's been surprised by the strength of the inflation performance from May to July, with a
