Field of the Invention This invention relates to the preparation of soap for human bathing and of deodorant soap for toilet rinsing. The soap utilized in the present invention is particularly suitable for hair washing and for sanitary hand washing. 2. Description of the Prior Art The broad concept of the preparation of a soap from a mixture of fatty acids with a suitable cationic surfactant is shown in U.S. Pat. No. 2,821,581 wherein a mixture of fatty acids with a suitable selected monovalent hydrocarbon salt is treated at elevated temperature with a suitable acid to hydrolyze the fatty acids and then the mixture of fatty acids and the hydrolyzed salt is treated with an anionic surface-active agent so as to generate the neutral soap. In the washing of human hair, soaps of the type shown in U.S. Pat. No. 2,821,581 when utilized in combination with anionic detergents are normally employed in the form of a paste or cream that is applied to the hair. This presents substantial difficulties in that the hair must be washed with the soap and the soap must then be removed from the hair, sometimes leaving a film on the hair that is difficult to remove. The concept of employing a liquid washing soap is shown
