the party held a meeting at the end of april 1975. but sheikh ayaz had not been able to take time off from his job as editor of the sindhi times, a job he had to give up once the party appointed him as a member of its first central committee. sheikh ayaz had been appointed to the committee when the party was still a group of a dozen men and women. the party had set out to work for the overthrow of the sheikh regime, but no longer had any media behind it. now that the awami league is the ruling party, it is useful for them to have a poet who is renowned not just in his own province but all over the country. although he was a member of the awami league central committee, sheikh ayaz remained outside the government. he remained active in poetry, and wrote more than twenty volumes of poetry. he was influenced by the tharawal tradition of sufism, as well as other traditions. it is not clear if his poetry had any strong political message. his poetry was mainly about nature, the people of sindh, the sufi saints of the sindhi people, or the people of other regions of the country. however, in the 1970s, he composed a satirical play about the sindhi language, called katae utano katae, and this was performed in a crowded hall in hyderabad. it is quite a lengthy piece of drama, but it shows the power of the tharawal tradition, and the ability of sindhi language to rise again as a living language. he was also a very conservative sindhi. he believed that the sindhi people are superior to other people. this is why he believed that they should rule the country. and he was also aware of the fact that the world was developing rapidly, and that sindh would not be able to keep up with this progress. if sindh did not change, it would eventually become a backwater. 5ec8ef588b
